There is a critical shortage of physicians, nurses, and other health professionals who provide services to elderly U.S. service members, their families, and their veterans. In 2006, the U.S. Congress created the national VA Health Care Corps, which provides health care, disability compensation, and education services to members of the U.S. armed forces who are injured, ill, or injured again during the period of their military service. The major focus of this Veterans' Health Administration (VHA) initiative is to increase the health care professional workforce to provide comprehensive health care services to Veterans and their families, resulting in a net reduction in the number of people who need to rely on Medicaid and other federal health care programs. The authors propose that a "lifelong learning approach," which increases the use of flexible, remote educational programs to teach the most up-to-date knowledge to professional students, can help address this problem. Flexibility can be achieved through remote education by using "learning technologies" such as the Internet, social media, and distance learning.Impact of the type of stapler device on postoperative complications, need for surgical repair, and recurrence in patients undergoing laparoscopic distal gastrectomy: A propensity score-matched cohort study. Recently, laparoscopic surgery has gradually replaced open surgery for gastric cancer. Staplers are widely used in various surgical procedures, but few studies have investigated the impact of staplers on the recurrence or complications of gastric cancer. This study aimed to compare the risk of recurrence and the rate of postoperative complications after stapler-assisted laparoscopic distal gastrectomy (S-LADG) and conventional LADG. The patients who underwent S-LADG or conventional LADG were identified by f678ea9f9e
